

Medical Students for Choice UIC: Anti-Racism & Reproductive Justice Intersectionality Resources

Alicia Garza, #BlackLivesMatter: “Reproductive justice is very much situated within the Black Lives Matter movement. And the way we that talk about that is that essentially, it’s not just about the right for women to be able to determine when and how and where they want to start families, but it is also very much about our right to be able to raise families, to be able to raise children to become adults.... And that is being hindered by state violence in many different forms. One form being violence by law enforcement or other state forces, and the other form of crisis through poverty and lack of access to resources and lack of access to health communities that are safe and sustainable.”

Materials to answer: what is the importance of the intersectionality between racism and reproductive justice? How do these two systems correlate with each other? What can I do to help?

Reproductive Justice Resource Lists:

- Applying an Intersectional Analysis to Reproductive Justice and Other Forms of Oppression: Collaborating Across Movements and Issues: The resources in this section address a variety of issues that intersect with reproductive justice, including economic rights, the rights of incarcerated women, immigrants' rights, transgender rights, disability rights, religion, birth choice and birth rights, voting rights, and environmental conservation.

Readings:

- Killing the Black Body: Race, Reproduction, and the Meaning of Liberty by Dorothy Roberts — A black feminist anthem and a rallying cry to civil rights activists who have gone soft, Dorothy Roberts' Killing the Black Body exposes how recent legislation has restricted the reproductive rights of black people, particularly those who live in poverty. No discussion of reproductive or racial justice is complete without this book.
- Undivided Rights: Women of Color Organizing for Reproductive Justice by Loretta Ross — presents a textured understanding of the reproductive rights movement by placing the experiences, priorities, and activism of women of color in the foreground. Using historical research, original organizational case studies, and personal interviews, the authors illuminate how women of color have led the fight to control their own bodies and reproductive destinies.
- Medical Apartheid: The Dark History of Medical Experimentation on Black Americans from Colonial Times to the Present by Harriet A Washington — the first and only comprehensive history of medical experimentation on African Americans. Starting with the earliest encounters between black Americans and Western medical researchers and the racist pseudoscience that resulted, it details the ways both slaves and freedmen were used in hospitals for experiments conducted without their knowledge, a practice that continues today.
- Wake Up Little Susie: Single Pregnancy & Race Before Roe v. Wade by Rickie Solinger — Focusing on the two decades that followed World War II, Rickie Solinger's Wake Up Little Susie dissects the double standard that emerged toward unwed pregnancy in the postwar period. White parents gave up children for adoption, which was not available to black parents, and this disparity was used — and continues to be used today — to argue against black families' worth and self-direction in the U.S.
- Reproducing Race: An Ethnography of Pregnancy as a Site of Racialization by Khiara Bridges — this ethnography of pregnancy and birth at a large New York City public hospital explores the role of race in the medical setting and investigates how race carries powerful and disproportionately tragic material consequences for black mothers.
